Buffalo native Kevin Dean married Carey Bennett, a costume designer with a sense of humor (SCRUBS, The Office). When the talented designer started making fuzzy buffalo hats with horns for family members here in Buffalo, people started trying to buy them off of their heads, and a small business was born.

The hats, (think Flintstones and Honeymooners) are a natural for all Buffalonians, but particularly sports fans. The horns are snap-on, so they rotate and can be taken off entirely, depending on the wearer's mood.

In town from LA, Kevin and local members of his family went to Pano's last night after a photo shoot in front of HSBC. Their dinner was interrupted several times by people interested in buying the hats, so Kevin went back out to the car, got his supply and sold some. One went to Don Hoffman from Airport Jewelers (the arm and a leg guy), who thinks he might incorporate the cap in an upcoming commercial.

The buffalo hat business has become a family affair--with Dean's sister, Mary O'Brien helping him to market, and his neice, Buffalo State College art major, Kelly O'Brien, designing the logo.

Dean, a key grip in Hollywood, says he loves Buffalo and likened it to LA, a place where he says people used to go into the city to work, and then head out at night. Now, however, La is filling up with loft apartments and live/work space for artists, in a renaissance movement...just like Buffalo's.
